March 2019

Portfolio managers commentary

British members of parliament undertook to place their country in an uncertain situation as to the UK's future with the European Union. This unsettled the world of finance. Many were expecting a clear outcome on the original March deadline. In spite of this, subordinated assets continued their positive run, notably bonds denominated in USD.

Two main factors seemed to have contributed to this positive performance for March. The first follows the Federal Reserve recent statement concerning the forthcoming end of its balance sheet reduction program. This 'Quantitative Tightening' policy had weighed negatively on financial markets in 2018. The second influence comes from the monetary situation in Europe and Japan. As yields disappear on Fixed Income assets in these regions, more and more foreign investors are turning to USD denominated assets for the positive return potential they provide. With capital flows moving towards the United States, the USD subordinated bond market has been positively benefiting from this trend.

The USD Fixed Income market is very important, which enables ASG Capital to source interesting investment opportunities still. Purchases made in March (yield to call): HSBC 6.33% call 2024, Nordea 6.57% call 2026, Santander 7.5% call 2024.
