OUTLOOK & REVIEW

April 2022 was another 'risk off' month for bonds. The Federal Reserve's (Fed.) policy continued on an aggressive path to monetary normalization. Further interest rate increases and a reduction of the Fed.'s balance sheet are to be expected soon. The objective is to slow aggregate demand in an effort to tame inflation. Some question whether this monetary choice is really appropriate in the light of a 'supply side shock' currently fueling inflation.

The financial markets, on the Fixed Income side, have to a large extent anticipated the Fed's future actions. However, as inflation remains uncontrolled due to supply chain disruptions, this uncertainty is maintaining a high degree volatility in this asset class. At some point in time, this policy will have reached its declared objective to slow the demand side of the economy. The first signs of this change are starting to appear with a negative print for growth of US GDP in Q1.

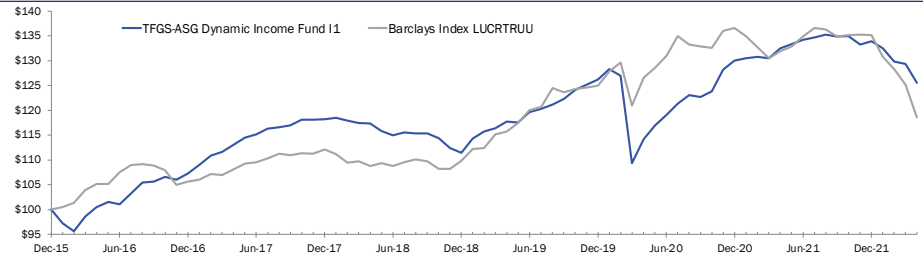

Our approach is step by step and cautious. We remain focused on low duration high yielding debt instruments of quality corporations, for the re-investment option these assets provide. The carried yield return of the portfolio now stands just under 8%.
